“When patients feel they are being listened to and have an active say in their medical care, it goes a long way in building trust and creating a strong relationship with them.”

About Rachita Bansal, MD, FACP

Dr. Rachita Bansal’s love for science and problem-solving led her to a career in healthcare. “Apart from helping others, medicine gives me an opportunity for ongoing learning and continued personal and professional development,” she says. She believes in “shared decision-making,” and always strives to understand her patients’ needs and expectations. “When patients feel they are being listened to and have an active say in their medical care, it goes a long way in building trust and creating a strong relationship with them,” she explains. She finds it “very rewarding” to care for the senior population.

In her free time, Dr. Bansal enjoys spending time with her two children. She also likes practicing yoga and walking outside.
